

Faculty Positions in International Development University of Notre Dame

Assistant Professor of Anthropology and Development in Sub-Saharan Africa. The University of Notre Dame, Department of Anthropology, invites applications for a tenure-track position in anthropology at the assistant professor level. Topical area is open, but must include a geographic focus on sub-Saharan Africa and reflect an interest in issues associated with development, broadly construed. We are searching for an ethnographically grounded and theoretically informed scholar who brings both solid scholarship and innovative perspectives to their research, publications, and teaching. The successful candidate will be able to contribute to the Ford Family Program in Human Development Studies and Solidarity within the Kellogg Institute for International Studies (see <http://kellogg.nd.edu/fordprogram>). Appointment will begin August 2009; Ph.D. in anthropology must be in hand at time of appointment. Excellent teaching skills, a path toward an outstanding research record, and strong scholarly promise are expected. Please send a full CV, a letter of application, the names and contacts for three references, a writing sample and course syllabus to African Search Committee, 611 Flanner Hall, University of Notre Dame, Notre Dame IN 46556.

Two Assistant or Associate Professors of African History. The University of Notre Dame Department of History invites applications for two tenure-track positions in African history, any specialization, at either the assistant or associate professor level. Review of applications will begin on September 14, 2008, with interviews of finalists expected at the African Studies Association meeting in Chicago in October. Candidates should send a letter of application, c.v. and three letters of recommendation to African Search Committee, Department of History, 219 O'Shaughnessy Hall, University of Notre Dame, Notre Dame, IN 46556. For more information on African studies at Notre Dame, including the new Ford family program in Human Development Studies and Solidarity, see <http://kellogg.nd.edu/fordprogram>

Associate or Full Professor of International Development. The Ford Program in Human Development Studies and Solidarity and the Kellogg Institute for International Studies invite applications for a scholar at either the associate or full professor level who works on themes related to international development, with a preference for some field work in sub-Saharan Africa. The Ford Program (<http://kellogg.nd.edu/fordprogram>) supports research, teaching, and outreach aimed at understanding the conditions that affect human welfare, including the dynamics of extreme poverty, economic growth and development, the political and social determinants of the distribution of wealth and opportunity, politics and public policy, human rights, and human dignity. Applicants would be placed in their disciplinary department: political science, sociology, economics, anthropology, Africana studies, or theology, but would play a leading intellectual role in the development of the Ford Program. Please send letters of inquiry or nomination (preferably with c.v.) to Director, Kellogg Institute of International Studies, 130 Hesburgh Center, University of Notre Dame, Notre Dame, IN 46556.

The University of Notre Dame is an Affirmative Action/Equal Opportunity Employer. Women and minority candidates are encouraged to apply.
